

Jason Scott Earl is a new faculty member in the Business Management Department at Brigham Young University-Idaho where he teaches classes in business management and new venture creation. Prior to joining BYU-Idaho, he was the President of StarStone, LLC, a subsidiary of E.K. Industries, a leading material science technology company based in Santa Barbara, California. After graduating from Ricks College in Mechanical Engineering, he went on to Brigham Young University where he received his B.S. and M.S. degrees in Civil and Structural Engineering. Upon graduation from BYU, he worked for ExxonMobil in New Orleans as a structural engineer and later completed his MBA in corporate finance in the A.B. Freeman School of Business at Tulane University. Upon graduation from Tulane, he moved his family to Southern California where he accepted a management position with World Minerals involving corporate strategic planning and the acquisition analysis of 11 companies over a 4.5 year period.

He is married to Natalie Kunz and enjoys spending time with his three boys.
