

Economics

David Hall

I grew up in Yuba City, CA. After I played t-ball for two seasons, I decided to play basketball which became the love of my life for the next 15 years of my life; I played with friends constantly and on church teams and for my high school. I also wanted to be an architect from the childhood days I had spent playing with blocks. I attended a community college before my mission and studied architecture, loving every minute of it. I served a mission in 2004 in the Colorado Denver North. When I came home I decided that BYU-Idaho was the right place for me to be and started school in the fall. BYU-Idaho does not offer a four year degree in architecture so I decided to study economics after taking Econ 111 from Brother Sexton my first semester. Economics has been a great subject to study and I am grateful for my professors and the things I have been blessed to learn about the world around me.
